Working in Switzerland

Switzerland as country of immigration

Switzerland, a country in the centre of Europe, has a long tradition of immigration. As a consequence of its stable economic and political situation, many multinational companies have their headquarters in Switzerland. Switzerland is a leader in research and development due to its renowned universities. Many people from different countries live and work in Switzerland on account of its stable job market.

Working in Switzerland

Anyone wishing to work in Switzerland needs to have a work permit before taking up gainful employment.

Besides a valid work permit, in the case of people requiring a visa, a valid visa is necessary for entry (see contacts).

Who can work in Switzerland?

Switzerland has a dual system for the authorization of foreign workers:

EU/EFTA nationals enjoy priority in the event of authorization to access the labour market.

Nationals of all other countries (so-called third country nationals) are allowed entry to the Swiss labour market in addition to foreign workers from the EU/EFTA area, but have to fulfill the subsequent preconditions:

Approval criteria for third country nationals

1. Employees who do not originate from an EU/EFTA country can only work in Switzerland in senior management positions, as specialists or other qualified personnel. Permits are only granted in the overall economic interests of Switzerland.

A person with a degree from a university or institution of higher education plus several years of professional experience is deemed to be qualified. Depending on the profession or specialization, people with special training and several years of professional experience are also approved.

2. Foreign employees have a right to the same salary and the same working conditions as Swiss nationals.
3. Third country nationals are only authorized when no Swiss or EU/EFTA national is available for the job envisaged.
4. The number of work permits issued to third country nationals in Switzerland is restricted (maximum number).

8-day regulation

Basically, no permit requirement exists in the case of a transnational service provided for up to eight days per calendar year. However, a visa may be required for entry. Please check the applicable visa provisions. In certain fields (especially in the erotic entertainment sector), a work permit is required starting from the first day. Please find out for yourself at the competent authority whether you require a work permit (see contacts).

No work without a permit

Anyone working in Switzerland without a work permit renders himself/herself liable to punishment (imprisonment up to one year or a fine). The same applies to an employer who employs a foreign national without a work permit.

Anyone who stays illegally in Switzerland is liable to expulsion from Switzerland and a ban on entry to the Schengen area.

How and where to apply for a work permit?

In Switzerland employers are responsible for obtaining work permits. They submit an application to the labour market or migration authorities in the relevant canton. These authorities provide information about the procedure and the application documents to be submitted.
